The BRITISH LEGION ALBUM

IN AID OF FIELD-MARSHAL EARL HAIG'S APPEAL FOR EX-SERVICE MEN OF ALL RANKS

COMPILED BY E. LONSDALE DEIGHTON

CASSELL AND COMPANY LTD.
London · New York · Toronto · Melbourne

The thanks of the Legion are accorded to all who have helped to make this Album wide-ranged in scope, and to the publishers concerned, including Messrs. T. Fisher Unwin for the lines from "Poems," by W. B. Yeats, and Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton and E. P. Dutton Co., New York, for the extract from "To Tell You The Truth," by Leonard Merrick, to Canon J. O. Hannay (George A. Birmingham) for the excerpt from "On Behalf of the State," to Messrs. Elkin Mathews, Ltd., for the late Maurice Hewlett's poem "Trenches," from "Gai Saber," and to Messrs. Methuen & Co., Ltd., for the extracts from "The Mirror of the Sea" (Joseph Conrad) and "The Dolly Dialogues" (Anthony Hope). Also to Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., for the extracts from B. J. Dale's "A Song of Praise" (copyright 1923), Sir F. H. Cowen's "The Butterfly's Ball" (copyright 1901), Sir E. Elgar's "The Dream of Gerontius" (copyright 1900), Sir Alexander Mackenzie's "Benedictus," and Sir C. Villiers Stanford's "The Revenge"; and, further, to Messrs. G. Ricordi & Co. for Signor Puccini's extract from "Madama Butterfly," and Dame Nellie Melba's quotation from the same composer's "La Bohème."

Field-Marshal The Earl Haig,

Foreword.

Many men & women who in their several spheres and ways of life, by reason of the great responsibilities they bear, by public service, honour and esteem, or by the brilliant use of their common gifts, have won eminence among their fellow-country men, have assisted in the making of this Book.-

In so far as I may speak for the Ex-service men of the British Legion, to whose benefit will be devoted whatever money this unique collection of autographs may bring in, I desire respectfully & thank all who have contributed to it — not a few of them contrary to well Established rule —, for the kindly act and thought which have enabled this Book to be published.-

They would be the first to recognise that this volume represents something much more than a mere assemblage of famous signatures. It stands for the personal tribute of the greatest in place and genius, of many nations, to the greatness of soul of those learned & unlearned millions, who knew and dared Enough to strike a blow for RIGHT & JUSTICE upon Earth.

Each signature is an acknowledgement of the simplest and grandest of human virtues; the love of liberty and fair dealing among men. Courage, patriotism and self-sacrifice. All whose names are found within these pages have shown by their readiness to help living ex-service men, the depth and the sincerity of their respect, and gratitude, towards the dead; towards fallen Comrades of ours, who dying left homes and dear ones destitute; towards those gallant lads who fell on the threshold of life.

"These laid the world away; .....
" ..... and those who would have been,
" Their sons, they gave, their immortality."

Haig
of Bemersyde. F.M.
President of The British Legion. -

As President of the Women's Section of the British Legion, I am glad to avail myself of this opportunity to express the hope, that this beautiful & interesting Album may find a ready sale on behalf of the most deserving cause, for which it has been compiled.

Earl Haig's Appeal should meet with a particularly eager response from the Women of the Empire, for they owe everything to those gallant men, who answered the call of duty, not counting the cost.

A Message

from

The Rt. Hon. H. H. Asquith, P.C., K.C., M.P.

I am glad to have the opportunity of commending this Album not only does it commemorate brave men, who died in a great cause, but it also strives to pay some of the debt still owing to their brave comrades who survived.

There is no duty, which ought to be more seriously realised by us all, than to give effective support to Lord Haig's Fund to relieve distressed ex-Service men.

Their necessities should never be forgotten by the generation which they helped to save.

The example of sense of duty and of self-sacrifice for their country, as set by the men of the British Legion in the Great War, is not one that should be allowed to die.

It is our aim, therefore, in the Boy Scout movement to keep it alive in the next generation by holding up the ideal and encouraging its pursuit among the Scouts.

"Of the First B.E.F."

by

Dr Robert Bridges, M.A, M.B, D.Litt, LL.D, F.R.C.P.

(Poet Laureate)

Of the first B.E.F.

One of all our brave commanders,
Bound to me by kinship fast,
Led his men in France and Flanders
From the first brush to the last.

Peril loved he, and undaunted
Sought it out, & thank'd his stars
That to him a place was granted
In the worst of all the wars.

He brought Ulcan's in from Soignies,
Where the first blood was let out;
With his remnant from Andregnies
Saved S^t Quentin's desperate rout.

Stiffly fought he thro' the onset
Undisheartened by defeat;
Held the rear from dawn till sunset
In the long days of retreat.

Times were, to retake the trenches
He dismounted his dragoons,
Suck'd his share of gas & stenches
With lieutenants of platoons.

6

Hit by howitzers and snipers
He, in his four years campaign
Rode the land from Rheims to Ypres,
On the Marne & on the Aisne.

7

Many deeds would be to blazon,
Many fights, to tell them all,
Nieuport, Wichet, Contalmaison,
La Boiselle & Passchendaal.

8

Nothing in his clean vocation
Vex'd his soul or came amiss
From the hurried embarcation
To the fateful armistice:

9

But when terms of truce were bruited,
Then his cheery countenance fell
To confession undisputed
That things were not going well:

10

"Nay, he said, my hope was larger,
'Twas not thus I took'd to win;
I had vowed to rein my charger
In the streets of proud Berlin."

"The sun was now low, & the sunk light touched the oon, so that her smudged arc kindled & shone out of the ld dimness. There was a great clearness & cleanness in e watery air, so that he could see the roofs of farmsteads far way, & little cottages standing alone like toadstools in the ields .... It was all very still, very lovely, steeped through with e spirit of peace - & even the beat of the guns could be heard night. These were the fields for which the boys in France had ied, the farms & lanes they had sealed in the possession of their ncient peace by a covenant signed in blood. As Mr. Sumption oked round him at the country slowly sinking into the ilight, a little of its quiet crept into his heart. These were e fields for which the boys had died. They had not died r England - what did they know of England & the British

After the "Cease Fire!"

by

Sir Philip Gibbs, K.B.E.

After the "Cease Fire!"

The last words of the last message by Philip Gibbs, as war correspondent on the Western Front.

November 11. 1918.

And now the world in its heart must salute all our soldiers who through these four years and more of war have fought for this victory by great heroism through many years of horror and tragedy, with enormous sacrifice. I see only two figures in this war now that hostilities have ceased — the officers and men who have gained this victory on the Western Front. One is the figure of the regimental officer, from subaltern to battalion commander, the boys and their elder brothers, who went over the top at dawn and led their men gallantly, hiding any fear of death they had, and who in dirty dishes and dug-outs, in mud and swamps, in fields under fire, in ruins that were shell-torn heaps, in all the filth and misery of this war, held fast to the flame of manhood, and in the worst hours did not weaken, and for their country's sake and the game they played offered up their life, and all that life means to youth, as a free, cheap, gift. And the other figure is Tommy. Poor old Tommy! You have had a rough time, and you hated it, but my God you have been patient and long suffering, and full of grim and silent courage, not swanking about the things you have done, not caring a bit for glory, but sure things you have done, and it is well done.

You have done your job, and it is well done.

Nod

by

Walter de la Mare

Nod

Softly along the road of evening
In a twilight dim with rose,
Wrinkled with age, and drenched with dew,
Old Nod, the shepherd, goes.

His drowsy flock streams on before him,
Their fleeces charged with gold,
Where the sun's last beam leans low
On Nod the shepherd's fold.

His dogs are quick and green with burrs,
From them sand the comets creep;
And all the birds that fly in heaven
Flock singing home to sleep.

His lambs outnumber a month's roses,
Yet when night's shadows fall
His blind old sheep-dog, Slumber-Soon,
Misses not one of all.

His are the quiet steps of dreamland,
The waters of no-more-pain,
His rams butt rings 'neath an arch of stars,
'Rest, rest, and rest again.

... All passes, all changes: the animosity of peoples, the handling of fleets, the forms of ships ..... In this ceaseless rush of shadows and shades, that, like the fantastic forms of clouds cast darkly upon the waters on a windy day, fly past us to fall headlong below the hard edge of the implacable horizon, we must turn to the national spirit, which, superior in its force and continuity to good and evil fortune, can alone give us the feeling of an enduring existence and of an invincible power against the fates.

Mirror of the Sea, p. last. Joseph Conrad.

... I have endeavoured to catch a reflection of the glow which blazed in the hearts of young intellectual officers at the very beginning of the War. If the inevitable wear and tear of the interminable struggle this beauty fades into the light of common day, so much the more is there need that we should fix it in memory, since in a world which savagery and treason have made so hideous, we cannot afford to let this jewel be trampled into oblivion.

"I lay down my pen with the deep conviction that the final results of this great convulsion are meant to be spiritual rather than material and that upon an enlightened recognition of this depends the future history of mankind. Not to change rival frontiers but to mould the hearts and spirits of men — there lie the explanation and the justification of all that we have endured. The system which left seven million dead upon the fields of Europe must be rotten to the core. Time will elapse before the true message is mastered but when that day arrives the war of 1914 may be regarded as the end of the dark ages and the start of that upward path which leads away from personal or national selfishness towards the City Beautiful upon the distant hills"

Last paragraph of "History of the war"

A Message.

"That, in October, was Nature's voice to him — of preparation for winter & beyond winter with ineffable assurance for spring, bring winter what it might; of her sublime imperviousness to death; of her enormous certainty, old as creation, based in the very foundations of the world.... He used to think: "No one can possibly doubt in early Autumn. In Winter, perhaps; and Spring and Summer you can think, especially, that it will pass. But in October — no; not then! And not only death — life; life as one lives it. You can't, can't feel in Autumn that in the barest depths is hope yet. You can only feel — know — that as long as life is life, there must be an uplift at the bottom of it all. There must be."

"The Lake Isle of Innisfree"

by

W. B. Yeats.

Innisfree

I will arise & go now, & go to Innisfree
& a small cabin build there, of clay & wattles made,
Nine bean rows will I have there, a hive for the honey bee & live alone in the bee-loud glade.

& I shall have some peace there for peace comes dropping slow dropping from the veils of the morning, to where the cricket sings;
There midnight's all a glimmer & noon a purple glow
& evening full of the linnet's wings.

I will arise & go now, for always night & day
I hear the lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore;
While I stand on the roadway or on the pavements gray
I hear it in the deep heart's core.

From The Gaol Gate - Mary Cahel's praise of her son -

" Are there any people in the streets at all till I call on them to come hither ? Did they ever hear in Galway such a thing to be done, a man to die for his neighbour ?

" It is he was young & comely & strong, the best reaper & the best hurler - It was not a little thing for him to die, & he protecting his neighbour -

" I will go through East & Kilbeacanty & Drumdarrod & Duras ; I will call to the people & the Sergas as the fairs to make a great praise for Denis !

" I to stoop upon a stick for half a hundred years, I will never be tired with praising - Come hither, Mary Cushin, till we'll shout it through the roads, Denis Cahel died for his neighbour ! "

Col. John Buchan, LL.D.

The pains and losses are not yet to be assessed, but there is ground for humble confidence that the sacrifice and pain will yet bear fruit in the bettering of the world. The war was a vindication of the essential greatness of our common nature, for victory was won less by genius than by faithfulness in the many ... In this revelation democracy found its final justification, and civilization its truest hope"

Dear "The Better Vagabond!"

"You must help me in your work, I pray. Let me be the truest friend you or the one man in the world who does not prostitute his art for money or reputation, who sees God beneath a leper's skin & proclaims Him bravely, who reveals the magical beauty of humanity & compels the fool & the knave & the man with the mud-cake of the harlot to look, and sees them only with light in their hearts & faith in the destiny of the race & charity to one another — Let me be this, I pray, & Heaven! I shall have done more with life than Christ & terrible manly hands — and I shall have justified my existence. You will be this for me, Artist?"

On Success.

by

Arnold Bennett.

"It is very wrong to make people do things they don't want to do, even when those things are right. Very wrong! One always believes that if a man wants to go to hell and were compelled to go to heaven, he'd end by turning heaven into hell."

Old Mrs Thurlow in Act I of The Ship

St John Ervine Septr 5. 1922.

"There is a worse guide to success than your typical successful man. He seldom understands the reasons of his own success; and when he is asked to appear in public to give his experience for the benefit of the youth of another generation it is impossible for him to be natural or sincere. He knows the kind of thing that is expected from him; and if he didn't come to London with half-a-crown in his pocket he probably did something against which his instincts thrust down, & the note of the artificial is struck, and you get the genuine humbug!... Successful men forget so much of their lives! Moreover, nothing is easier than to explain an accomplished fact in a nice, agreeable, conventional way. The entire business of success is an enjoyable social conspiracy on the part of the minority to deceive the majority."

From

To A Field Ambulance In Flanders

Your faces are like the face of her whom you follow,
Danger,
The Beloved who looks backwards as she runs,
calling to her lovers
The Huntress who flies before her quarry, trailing her lure.

... ...

You go
Under the thunder of the guns, the shrapnels' rain and the curved lightning of the shells,
And where the high towers are broken,
And houses crack like the staves of a thin
crate filled with fire;
Into the mixing smoke and dust of roof and walls torn asunder

You go;
And only my dream follows you.

... ...

Your names are strung with the names of ruined
and immortal cities,
Termonde and Antwerp, Dixmude and Ypres and Furnes
Like jewels on one chain ——

"A man will do for Mankind or for his Country what he will not do for himself ... A niche of usefulness and self-respect exists for every man, however handicapped; but that niche must be found for him. To carry the powers of restoration to a point short of this is to leave the Cathedral without Spire."

When the high heart we magnify,
And the pure vision celebrate,
And worship greatness passing by,
Ourselves are great.

From the Lake

"I shall never see that lake again but I shall never forget it," and as he dozed in the train, in a corner of an empty carriage the spectral light of the lake awake him, and when he arrived at Cork it seemed to him that he was being engulfed in the deep pool by the Goyeetown shore. On the deck of the steamer he heard the lake's warble above the volume of the waves. "There is a lake in every man's heart," he said, "and he listens to its monotonous whisper year by year, more and more attentive till at last he unguids"

— Le Maintaindrai
(motto of the House of Orange)

Namur, August 1695

The attack by Louis XIV on the liberties of Holland in 1672, led to the two long wars which overthrew the predominant power of France in Europe. The English Revolution of 1688 and the formation of the Grand Alliance by William of Orange, King of England and Stadholder of the United Provinces, were the most important incidents of the terrific struggle.
The retaking of the fortress of Namur was the first decisive victory gained by the Allies, and was rapidly followed by the Peace of Ryswick (1697), by which Louis was forced to renounce his dreams of aggrandisement at the expense of Europe.

The second Phase of Namur:—

"— William now gave orders that his batteries were to be brought in play from every available position, both on the ramparts gained, and from every rock and outwork in the possession of the Allies. He himself rode through the broken wall, and took up his position inside the French palisades, where his horses could scarcely find a foothold for the dead and dying.

The air was so full of powder smoke, that the walls and towers of the castle appeared to hang as in a great fog, with no visible foundations; the crash of the musketry was incessant, and the fierce flames ran across the dark heavy vapour; fragments of rock and wall rolled continually down the slope - dislodged by bombs bursting, or the explosion of barrels of powder.
But this was as nothing to the cannonade. When the combined batteries of the allies opened on Sevastopol, the oldest soldiers could remember no such fire — it was a bombardment as had never been known in any war before.
The French gunners dropped one after another before they could point their guns to the pieces, and were obliged to take refuge in their underground galleries; the noise was unceasing, and the continual flames lit up the rocks, the chasms, and bastions, with as steady and awful a glare as if the world was on fire. —

From "Reveillé."

Plain Song by

Eden Phillpotts

Within the holy of your hearts, oh hear the eagles blow —
The eagles blow Reveillé at the golden gates of morn,
And welcome with their clarion unspeakable fore-glow
Of a sunrise where the souls of men are being newly born.
Awake, arise, ye legions, to the challenge of the dead;
Awake, arise & follow in the footsteps they have worn;
For their spirits and the glory of the dayspring overhead,
Call their eagles blow Reveillé at the golden gates of morn."

From "To Tell You The Truth"

. . . Went over to Skinner & Mopham's; hoping to find you. They haven't done so bad neither, with their "heroic fortitude". I'm told the girls that used to run in for six-three-farthing quills for their hats have been buying separation allowance coats at thirty guineas as fast as hands could pick them off the hooks. Still, Mopham passed the time of day with me quite familiar, considering. "Proud thought for a young fellow, that he's done his duty to his country", he says. "Only wish I'd been of military age, myself", he says. "See our Roll of Honour in the window? Framed very stylish I think. Spared no expense to make it a handsome article. What for you, miss? Fits forward!"

It was there I heard you had gone wrong. "The women are splendid!" What price the rest? It made me feel queer last night, being so close to you again, Nelly, though you didn't recognise the bit of my face that the bandages left you see. I was the cripple by the door of the taxi, when you and the toff got in.

No. Sir, were Socrates & Charles XII both present in any company & Socrates were to say "Follow me and hear a Lecture on Philosophy" and Charles laying his hand on his sword, to say "Follow me, and dethrone the Czar", a man would be ashamed to follow Socrates. by

Canon James O. Hannay,
("George A. Birmingham")

On Behalf of the State

Dick Bradley - Colonel Bradley of the Connaught Rangers - looked round him with satisfaction. He had very reason to be pleased with his surroundings. The handsome plate and the beautiful table, the vases of flowers, the shining silver, the background of dark walls and old portraits, the carpet under his feet — all these appealed to him as things of taste and beautiful upholstering. In front of him was a plate of bacon and eggs — his bacon and fresh eggs. All this above was a dish of hot scones and a rack of toast. On the side table were cereal dishes and cold ham. After two years abroad the abundance of a home breakfast was delightful. .....

Lloyd Osbourne.

Yes, I got very fond of her — loved her you might call it, for all she was a little savage, ate squid, and carried a shark's tooth dagger against any of the girls that might show a fancy to me. In time I taught her to play cribbage and draughts and dominoes, so that at night we would sit by ourselves under the lamp, she and I, with the surf groaning on the outer reef, and it was more like home than I had ever had in my wandering, lonely, free-and-easy life.

She was quick to learn, and extraordinary loving, and yet she was full of impishness and saucy tricks. I thought to her instead of it's being the other way round. She had no idea of white people — used to say they looked like Kanakas who had been drowned for a week — and was most scornful how it was always cofra, cofra, cofra with us. It was quite her way to tease me and make me cross, for then she would struggle up and ripple over with laughter, and hold me tight in her soft, round, girlish arms, and say that I was her cofra — a whole ship of it, and that she would hang herself from a cocoanut tree if I were to die — and by God, she would have done it too, them fickle Island women being great on love, and the thing happening often enough.

TRENCHES.

As I lay in the trenches
Under the Hunter's Moon,
My mind ran to the benches
Cut in a Wiltshire down.

I saw their long black shadows,
The beeches in the lane,
The gray church in the meadows,
And my white cottage — plain.

But here's a thought to tally
With t'other. That moon sees
A shrouded German valley
With woods and ghostly trees.

And maybe there's a river
The like of ours at home
With poplar-trees a-quiver
And clots of whirling foam

And one there some fellow,
A German and a foe,
Whose gills are turning yellow
As sure as mine are so,

Watches that riding glory
Apparell'd in her gold,
And craves to hear the story
Her frozen lips enfold:

And if he sees as clearly
As I do where her shine
Must fall, he longs as dearly,
With heart as full as mine.

Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries.

These, in the day when heaven was falling,
The hour when earth's foundations fled,
Followed their mercenary calling
And took their wages and are dead.

Their shoulders held the sky suspended;
They stood, and earth's foundations stay;
What God abandoned, these defended,
And saved the sum of things for pay.

"Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war, but their winning does not stir and sting our souls to their finest responses, or nerve great multitudes to endure agony and martyrdom, or leave the hearts of men tingling with exultant remembrance of conquest over enthroned and fortressed evil. Victories of peace bring provender and comfort and happiness to mankind, but victories in righteous war sow rich aftermaths of spiritual satisfaction and harvests of spiritual profit. .... It is a sure and true instinct that makes the man who defends his country, not merely for admiration and honour, but for admiration and honour of an exalted kind that we give to no other man."

The Service.

Have we not all one freedom, lost and found
When to one service body and soul are bound?
And is not life itself, if need arise,
A great endeavour, an endless fight
For all men's native land, and worth the price
Of all men's service and their sacrifice?

× × × × × ×

The Brotherhood, the Service, Life at War,
These are the words that hold where borders are,
These only marks the men who weary not,
The men who fall rejoicing, self-forgot.

× × × × × ×

My friends, I do not ask for men like these
A little Dole, a little time of ease.
For them and all who have them, all who mourn,
And all that to their faith shall yet be born,
I ask you this – take them for what they are,
Your Comrades in the Service, Life at War.

Extract from "The Making of an Englishman"
by W. L. George.

The Frenchman addresses England:

What are you doing?
living. That is enough. Asking no more. Just wanting to keep the blinds down so that life may be decently obscured.
England is busily engaged in not pulling the blinds up.
living cleanly, without worrying about what will happen next. You'd die well, most of you, if it came to that: it's a good deal.
I love you, oh! not blindly as in Edwardian days. I know you're not so nimble as the French, and that you enjoy shooting ideas as much as you enjoy shooting grouse. But I love your calmness in the presence of life; I love your mentality, your unobtrusive courage, your economy of emotion, and the immense, sane generosity of you... You are the dignity, the solidity of the world. The French are its passion; you are its reason.

A pause to wait for a long race – the road is clear," he said firmly.

Looking into his eyes, she knew that he read her life and soul; that in his deep primitive way he understood how she had been cast out by the law, and felt his instinct to go on. She bent down upon his breast.

A bugle-call rang out piercingly and came across the valley. It echoed and echoed away among the hills.

He raised his head to listen. Pride, vision & power were in his eyes.

"It's all before us still, Jasmine," he said again.

Her fingers tightened on his.

fell in the War of Independence. (Princeton, New Jersey, U.S.A.)

And, ere the wrath paled on that sunset died,
Looked through the ages; then, with eyes aglow,
Laid them to wait that future, side by side.

The Old Army

We shall win this war one day, and most of the credit will go, as usual, to those who are in at the finish. But — when we assign the glory and the praise, let us not forget those who stood up to the first rush. The New Armies .... will bring us victory in the end. But let us bare our heads to the memory of those battered, decimated indomitable Legions who saved us from utter extinction at the beginning. (The First Hundred Thousand, p 234)

Mr Punch: the Friend of Soldier, Sailor & Empire

Extract from the Prologue to Mr Punch's History of the Great War

". . . . If 'when war begins then hell opens,' the saying gained a tenfold truth in the greatest War of all, when the aggressor at once began to wage it on non-combatants, on the helpless and innocent, on women and children, with a cold and deliberate ferocity unparalleled in history . . . . in the shock of this discovery Mr. Punch thought seriously of putting up his shutters. How could he carry on in a shattered and mourning world? . . . . It became possible, thanks to the temper of all our people in all parts of the Empire, above all to the unwavering confidence of our sailors and soldiers, to that 'wonderful spirit of light-heartedness, that perpetual sense of the ridiculous' which, in the words of one of Mr. Punch's many contributors from the front, 'even under the most appalling conditions never seemed to desert them, and which indeed seemed to flourish more freely in the mud and rain of the front-line trenches than in the comparative comfort of billets or "cushy jobs."' Tommy gave Mr. Punch his cue, and his high example was not thrown away on those at home, where, when all allowance is made for shirkers and slackers and callous pleasure-seekers, the great majority so bore themselves as to convince Mr. Punch that it was not only a privilege but a duty to minister to mirth even at times when one hastened to laugh for fear of being obliged to weep. In this resolve he was fortified and encouraged, week after week, by the generous recognition of his efforts which came from all parts of our far-flung line."

Winged Words

OF all the great works of English writers none is more loved than "Pilgrim's Progress." And no achievement is more inspiring than the accomplishment of this great allegory.

John Bunyan, son of a Bedfordshire tinker, wrote his masterpiece while languishing for three years as a prisoner in Bedford gaol. What a wonderful labour of love—what a gigantic task of writing and revision when the crude writing implements of his time are considered. How many a man would have given up appalled at the physical labour alone!

The writer of to-day suffers no such handicaps. For him, the most efficient writing machine, the Underwood Portable Typewriter, taps out his thoughts with a minimum of effort and with a speed and legibility undreamed of in Bunyan's day.

The Underwood Portable is as essential to the home as to the office, and though only weighing 8¾ lb. in its case, is capable of every writing need, and costs only £12 : 12 : 0. Write for free illustrated Booklet No. A. 24, which describes in detail this latest Underwood wonder, or call and have it demonstrated.

Beautiful Home Lighting

Just as a window can make or mar a room in the daytime so after nightfall does the whole environment depend upon the lighting.

Seekers after the beautiful in the home should become acquainted with the Aladdin Lighting Specialities, which cover every lighting requirement.

Here are four representative items from the Aladdin Catalogue :

1 THE ALADDIN MANTLE LAMPS burn common paraffin and radiate 80 candle-power, pure, white incandescent light—the best and least harmful known to science. Light at the wick like ordinary lamps, and burn without noise, smoke or smell. No pumping up—cannot explode. Can be carried safely from room to room. Simple to use, nothing to get out of order. Extremely economical because they burn 94 per cent. air and only 6 per cent. oil. Proved to cost less than ½d. an hour.

2 ALADDIN FLOOR LAMPS for electric lighting. Unusually handsome models that go well with most decorative schemes. No trouble has been spared to ensure that every detail of their beautifully balanced lines is exactly right and that the workmanship and finish are the finest obtainable. Made with broad, solid bases (not the customary hollow type) that keep them standing as steady as a rock wherever they are placed.

3 ALADDIN SILK SHADES are manufactured in a large variety of colours and designs for all kinds of lighting and to harmonise with any room in cottage or mansion. The frames are specially constructed and are much stronger than the frames of ordinary shades.

4 ALADDIN CANDLESTICKS for electric fitting or ordinary candles. These attractive new candlesticks are beautifully made from the finest quality oak. They are strong and well balanced, with a broad, solid base that keeps them standing steady as a rock. Their artistic lines and splendid finish mark them as articles of distinction and good taste in any room.

Write for Catalogue of these and other Aladdin Lighting Specialities, or, if you are in London, call and see them.

The Super-Leather for Soles

"Dri-ped" is not a mere trade description; it is a brand by which you may recognize the best sole leather you can obtain. Not all green leather is "Dri-ped"; no leather is "Dri-ped" unless it bears the diamond trade mark in purple every few inches, whether on repairs or new footwear.

"Dri-ped," the Super-Leather for soles, is waterproof, double-wearing, light, flexible. It is readily obtainable either for re-soling or on new footwear, from all Repairers and Boot Dealers.

The Warrior's Tale.

Praise of "Dri-ped" Sole Leather forms a part of many a warrior's tale of privations, of battles, of discomforts and difficulties, of successes. Here are two of many letters received—both from returned Prisoners of War.

DEAR SIRS,—I cannot miss this opportunity of sounding the praises of "Dri-ped." Before going up the line to Oppy last March my Army boots were soled with your speciality. They accompanied me to the outpost, where I was captured on the 28th, and for many months they have done me good service in such places as Douai, Cantin, Marchiennes, Hasnon, Guimappes, Mons and Liège. When the Armistice came about, the "Dri-ped" soles were perfect after eight months' wear, whereas my comrades were walking on their uppers almost.—Yours truly, B. M.

DEAR SIRS,—I am writing to let you know how wonderfully good and lasting I have found "Dri-ped" soles. I was a prisoner of war in Germany, and wrote home for some soles to repair my boots. "Dri-ped" were sent, and I wore them continually about six months in the prison camp. I then succeeded in escaping, and walked about a hundred miles, reaching the Baltic coast, where I was retaken. I got constantly wet, and when I was retaken my boots were worn out, but the soles were still good. I had the same soles put on another pair of boots, and wore them for several months more and am much impressed by their durability.—Yours truly, B. C. (Capt.).

Mustard for Health

The golden condiment in the mustard pot which most of us take for granted as a mere "trimming" to our meals is a mighty health-promoter. A few years ago, Professor Pavlov, an eminent medical scientist, was awarded the Nobel Prize for discovering that appetite directly stimulates digestion. Mustard is Nature's own condiment, the simplest and safest spur to appetite and consequently to sound digestion.

George the First's Court Digester.

King George I, a monarch of epicurean tastes, set the fashion for the refined yellow mustard like Colman's make to-day. He found it a valuable aid to digestion and always had it on the Royal Table.

Mustard makes Beef and Pork and Cheese and all other kindred foods more nourishing and digestible. Why eat Mustard with Beef and not with Mutton? Mustard adds relish to Mutton just as it improves Pork. Cheese has a reputation as a digestive for meat and other foods. Yet cheese is starchy food and is itself indigestible to some people.

A little Mustard corrects this difficulty and enables the digestive organs to deal easily with cheese too.

The external use of Mustard.

Try it in your bath. Mustard makes an ordinary hot bath an invigorating luxury. It stimulates the skin to do its work of purification. It endows hot water with unsuspected powers of exhilaration. After physical exercise or exposure to cold weather there is nothing to equal a hot mustard bath as a restorative.

A mustard poultice promotes the circulation of the blood and so reduces inflammation and stops pain.

Is there any other herb on earth so widely useful to the human race as Mustard?

Colman's

BEAN
CARS

THE unqualified success of the 11.9 Bean brought forth last year an insistent demand for a model of more ambitious proportions with an even wider range of service.

The new "Fourteen" provided a response to that demand, and is acknowledged by leading critics to be "a British achievement of outstanding merit" that "stands out as a new car in a class of its own."

Built to the highest standard of design and workmanship, the price at last places within the reach of the majority of motorists an all-British car of comfort and elegance, with power for every need.

H.S.H. PRINCESS CATHERINE YOURIEVSKY

Daughter of the Late Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, writes:—

"I WANT to write and tell you what a wonderful restorative your Phosferine is. I always make a point of taking it when I feel tired and run down. After the terrible hardships and privations I had to undergo during the Revolution in Russia, when the Bolsheviks robbed me of all my possessions, my health became seriously impaired; and now I have my living to earn, and have become a professional singer, I take your admirable tonic as a pick-me-up whenever I need it before my concerts."

Phosferine exercises real and lasting benefit upon everybody's system, it invigorates brain and body naturally, and is given with equally good results to the children as to adults. The advantage of taking Phosferine is immediate—it makes you well and keeps you well.

PHOSFERINE
